I am honored and humbled to be writing this article as the 2017 President of MASFAP. WOW! Thank you for this amazing and life-changing honor. Thank you for placing your faith and trust in me. This is a responsibility I do not take lightly, and I will strive to represent you and listen to you with the utmost transparency and sincerity. For those of you who do not know me, I would like to share a little about my experiences with MASFAP.

As you may have learned last month during the conference, I have been a member of MASFAP for 25 years. Over the years, I have had the privilege of serving on several committees and chairing a few, I have been elected to Delegate-at-Large, Secretary and Treasurer - and now President. I have been so blessed to serve alongside so many incredible and inspiring people over the past 25 years!

I’ve tried to mix up the representation on the Board, so you will see folks from 4-year public institutions, 4-year private institutions 2-year public institutions, and associate members. Each person on the Executive Board, either elected or appointed, is here to represent you, the MASFAP membership, so please do not hesitate to contact myself or any of the board members if you have suggestions or concerns. A full list of the Executive Board is on the MASFAP website; on this page: http://www.masfap.org/docs/committees/ExecBoard/index.html.

The Executive Board has a retreat scheduled later this month at Cedar Creek Center in New Haven, MO. I am looking forward to the discussion and planning details that will occur during the retreat, I will be sharing an update about the retreat in the February newsletter. We already have some big events planned for this year; including MASFAP Hill Day in Jefferson City on February 14, and a Professional Development Training for Registrars and Business Officers tentatively scheduled for February 9 in Columbia. So mark your calendars! Registration for these events should be on our website soon!

I’d like to extend a special thank you to the many volunteers who work tirelessly to help us achieve and accomplish great things.

Cont.
I encourage you to volunteer within MASFAP in some capacity this year. We need you to share your talents. Please think about doing it to support MASFAP, do it to learn something new, do it to build relationships, or do it to develop yourself personally and professionally. Even if you are afraid it will take too much of your time, I assure you – it doesn’t have to be any more than you can give with a busy schedule. Many of our relationships are strengthened through volunteer experiences. I promise, it will feel amazing! You can start by joining a committee. Just go to MASFAP.ORG – Select Volunteer (from option on left) – Select your Top 3. Someone will contact you to get you involved.

As you know, we are celebrating MASFAP’s 50th Anniversary in 2017. Isn’t that awesome?! Our theme for the year will be Celebrating the Past and Inspiring the Future. This is truly an exciting and special time in our history; we have already started discussing some ideas for the celebration, so keep your eyes and ears open for more information throughout the next year. If you are interested in volunteering for this committee - you can! Just select the option to volunteer on the website!

As we celebrate 50 dynamic years of MASFAP, we must also prepare for our future. It seems as if this is the perfect time for us to complete a Long Range Plan for MASFAP. One of my goals for the year is to work with the Executive Board and develop and implement a Long Range Plan for MASFAP. As we all know, MASFAP is more than just the Executive Board – so I am asking you to contribute your ideas, too. If you have any recommendations I hope you will share, because ideas from our entire membership are valued.

MASFAP is an organization of amazing and talented people who have created a legacy, and we need to celebrate our history and our people. So this year I also want us to celebrate our people – because it is the people who have made our association what it is today and what it will be in the future. If we don’t have people who care about MASFAP, it will struggle to remain strong and relevant. No matter how long you have been in the financial aid profession, there is likely someone, or more than one person, who has inspired you. “That person” you think about who made a difference in your professional or personal life, and has made MASFAP special for you.

I want to collect stories highlighting the people who have made MASFAP what it is today. In order to accomplish this I NEED YOU to Share your Story! Everyone is invited to share their personal story about a special person who has made MASFAP special. You can send your stories directly to me via email, amyh@macc.edu. You can also create a short video message (using your phone or other video equipment) and email it to me; or, maybe I’ll catch you at a MASFAP event sometime this year and capture your story.

I am hoping to share our stories throughout the year; hoping they will inspire each of us to be “that person” for someone else and motivate us to pay-it-forward; hoping they will remind us about our traditions of old and hoping they encourage us to create new ones along the way through the next 50 years! As you remember your special person or persons, please consider how you can be “that person” to someone else. What can you do to encourage someone to get involved or provide professional support? How can you make a difference in someone’s life... no opportunity is too small when we're focused on sustaining our remarkable organization.

As we begin a new year full of opportunities, I encourage each of you to inspire, encourage and support each other; and I invite you to get involved with MASFAP – you will make a difference, and it will feel great!

I look forward to celebrating our past and inspiring our future with each of you this year. It is going to be a very exciting 2017 for MASFAP!
Happy New Year!

As 2017 sets in, if you haven’t made your New Year’s resolution (or if you already broke some!) – how about you consider getting more involved with MASFAP? There are lots of ways to advocate for students, meet new people, step out of your shell and network in your field.

You can help MASFAP kick off 2017 with our Hill Day in Jefferson City on February 14. This event goes throughout the day – (it is entirely up to your schedule how you would like to volunteer your time, of course) – and involves presentations to different committee members, meetings with key legislative staff, and getting the word out to legislators about what MASFAP is and what our members do!

To those that volunteered in prior years, we would be honored to have you back again. To those who have yet to volunteer, this is a great way to step out of your comfort zone and learn new things. Donating your time is a great way to make sure that every second of 2017 counts.

If you have any questions email wills@mohela.com. The registration sign-up is available on masfap.org under Professional Development Opportunities! Register today.

Every volunteer matters—please join us February 14, 2017 to make a difference for your students!
Jamie Davis—Vice President
I am so excited for 2017 and that we are celebrating 50 years of MASFAP! Our theme for this year’s conference is “Celebrating Our Past, Inspiring Our Future”, which is being held November 6-8, 2017 at the Lodge. If you would like to volunteer to be on the program committee to help make this year’s conference outstanding, please complete the volunteer form on the MASFAP website. Being a part of the program committee is a great way to see how everything comes together behind the scenes and is a great way to meet friends who work so hard to put on an amazing conference. Also, if you have an idea for a session or a topic, please let me know. Here’s to an amazing 2017!

Bridgette Betz—Secretary
Happy January! I am very excited to be back on the MASFAP Board and I am particularly excited to take on the new role of Secretary. I know I have some big shoes to fill with all of the past Secretaries and I am looking forward to being a part of this fantastic board!

Brice Baumgardner—Research Chair
Hello, I am Brice and I will be the Research Chair for the upcoming year. I am the Director at Hannibal-LaGrange University and have been in this role since 2008. I am excited about the opportunity to serve the association and looking forward to the 50th anniversary conference.

Crystal Bruntz & Susan Hartnagel—Professional Development
Plans are underway for at least 10 different PD events in 2017, maybe more! So watch your calendars as save the dates will be coming your way soon! Also, if you have PD ideas or would like to volunteer to present at a PD event please contact Susan Hartnagel at hartnagels@missouri.edu.

Gena Boling—Leadership Development
The 2017 MASFAP Leadership Development Program is scheduled to have our first meeting on February 15 where we’ll discuss association governance, learn a bit about MASFAP’s history, and start thinking about our roles in association leadership. I’m so eager to work with this group this year and can’t wait to see what they’ll be doing with the association in the future! 2017 Cohort members are:
Ashlee Binggeli, University of Central Missouri
Steve Garman, Missouri State University
Keri Gilbert, University of Missouri
Alex Miller, William Woods University
Laurel Miller, William Woods University
Jennifer Moore, Fontbonne University

Charles Mayfield—Technology
I’m excited to be part of the Board again after a several year hiatus. I look forward to helping the membership and other Board members with their technology needs.
Sarah Bright—Newcomer Committee
The 2017 goals for the Newcomer Committee are as follows:
• Reach out to new financial aid professionals
• Utilize leftover inventory as giveaways
• Host a newcomer session at the MASFAP conference
• Assist with celebrating MASFAP’s 50th Anniversary

Alexandria Miller—Early Awareness
Happy New Year MASFAP!! The Early Awareness Committee is looking for more awesome people to sign up for the committee. I’m hoping to do bigger and better things than last year, so come join us!

Angela Karlin—Nomination/Elections
Nomination/Elections will be working hard within the next few months to find our next group of leaders for MASFAP. Watch the list serv for important announcements regarding nominations. If you would like to be proactive, read the Policy and Procedures Manual and Constitution to get a feel for the job duties for our elected positions.

Lana DeJaynes—Awards Committee
The Awards Committee is transitioning and I will be meeting with Kerry Hallahan, previous Awards Chair, to learn the details of the responsibilities associated with the position. I look forward to the first MASFAP Board meeting of 2017 at the end of January!

Dena Norris—Budget & Finance
Budget & Finance will be focused on changing banking institutions during the first quarter of the year.

Melissa Findley—Communications
Do you feel like you are in the “know” in regards to MASFAP? I want to hear from you if you have any communication ideas as I want to make sure you feel like you are getting the most from your membership by knowing what is happening!

Janice Barnes & Ginny Burns—50th Anniversary
We are excited to be co-chairing the MASFAP 50th Anniversary Committee! While we have not been around MASFAP 50 years (even though those grey hairs are starting to sneak in), we have a love of MASFAP and the value the organization has brought to colleagues and students across our state for 50 years. The impact MASFAP has made is so far reaching. We are honored to help coordinate the celebration of that impact. Plans are already underway to Honor our Past and Inspire our Future!

Did you know that this year is MASFAP’s 50th Anniversary?!!??!
By Michelle Richardson—Student Connects, a USA affiliate

Over the past few months, I’ve been speaking with many colleagues about the nonacademic barriers to student success, and I often reference the 2016 FAFSA completion data. Of particular interest is the fact that the national FAFSA completion rate for high school seniors fell from 40.9 percent to 39.6 percent and that only five states—Oregon, West Virginia, Utah, North Carolina and Texas saw an increase in completion.

Low-income students’ misconceptions about financial aid

In October 2016, the National College Access Network (NCAN) released a report that examined the mindset of low-income students about their financial aid eligibility. It identifies some of the reasons that rate may be low, particularly for this population of students. The report begins by noting a 2011-12 National Postsecondary Student Aid Survey. The survey asked students to indicate why they hadn’t applied for aid, and 44.7 percent said it was because they did not believe they were eligible. But what is this belief based on?

The report goes on to explore current attitudes and behaviors toward financial aid among low-income students. It concludes that the belief that they are ineligible for aid often masks a troubling reality: they do not know whether or not they are eligible. These students are less likely to pursue aid opportunities. Because these findings have major implications for students and schools, they should help schools shape outreach strategies.

Getting resources to the students who need them

This is confirmed elsewhere in the study, where data show that, despite an abundance of information about student aid, the knowledge is not reaching the students who most need it. For example, 64 percent of the students who did not apply for aid reported they had no information about aid or had mistaken notions about it (for example, believing food stamps were a type of financial aid). Think about that: More than half of those who don’t apply for aid don’t understand what it is. Whether or not they are eligible becomes unfortunately irrelevant until we address that knowledge gap.

Further findings in the report identified a stark contrast in awareness of important issues between students who apply for aid and those who don’t. For example, 55 percent of students who didn’t apply believed that grants must be repaid, while only 12 percent of those who did apply held that belief. 32 percent of students who didn’t apply believed government loans were the same as private loans, whereas only 13 percent of students who applied believed that.

But what I found most telling among these statistics relates to this statement: “There are plenty of people I can ask about financial aid at my school.” 73 percent of students who applied for aid agreed with it, compared to only 34 percent of those who did not pursue aid. This is a staggering split between the two groups, and it underscores the importance of institutions raising awareness about financial literacy and other student engagement resources.

Although the sample size was small, this study does shed some light on why students may feel they are not eligible and do not apply. Particularly with the low national completion rate for all students, we need to focus more on getting the message out to those who need it. Students feel overwhelmed about the process to the point they are not connecting with the information that is out there. Institutions can address this with thoughtful engagement with students throughout the matriculation process and through college completion.
Is There a Student Loan Crisis?

By Will Shaffner, MOHELA Director of Business Development and Government Relations

It has been a focal point of many debates and articles both locally and nationally. It is such an important topic that it became an item for fodder in the presidential election. Needless to say, the question of whether we are currently in a student loan crisis is topical. By glancing at the news, you might think lending is seriously out of control with headlines such as “School-Loan Reckoning: 7 Million Are in Default” in The Wall Street Journal and “4 Ways to Manage Your Student Loan Burden” in Forbes.

The question of whether we are really in a crisis or if there are other factors at play is a broad discussion. One thing we do know is that it is critically important to receive a college degree to increase a student’s lifetime income, and often access to the degree can only be achieved with some amount of student loans.

We expect the Reauthorization of the Higher Education Act (HEA) will be on the agenda in the spring of 2017. HEA Reauthorization is an opportunity each five or six years when our national student aid programs can be reconstructed to better help families pay for college.

After monitoring information from politicians, there a few key things I think might be included in the HEA Reauthorization discussions when they commence. Now is the time to get informed about the positions of major legislators talking about HEA Reauthorization. Some key legislators include Senator Alexander, Senator Murray, Congresswoman Fox and Congressman Scott.

We could very well see the elimination of the undergraduate subsidized loan. We could also see GradPLUS/PLUS Loans have limits introduced, effectively limiting the amount that can be borrowed, among other initiatives.

For detailed information, please go to www.masfap.org. Go to the top left and select Financial Aid Administrators. Under Resources you will see information from Donald Trump as well as both the House and the Senate education committees.

If any of these items seem a bit concerning you, then now is the time to engage and get involved.

Make your voice heard.
Financial Aid Officers (FAOs) have an important role to play. FAOs are uniquely situated because of the access to data feeding the story about student loans and overall student debt. The local, regional and national numbers don’t necessarily tell the whole story. What story do you have? What have you seen historically that works or doesn’t work with the current structure?

How to advocate.
• Know who represents your segment or interests
• Follow the issues at the state and national level through organizations like MASFAP, MASFAA (Midwest), NASFAA, IFAP announcements and others
• Review higher-education financing items published in the Federal Register, such as negotiated rulemaking proposals
• Respond during the comment period on the negotiated rulemaking proposals
• Pick your topic and share your opinion (be sure your institution’s government relations team is in the loop or share opinions as a private citizen, not on behalf of your organization)
• Meet your legislators and contact them through phone, email or in-person visits
• Join legislative committees through associations like MASFAP
• Focus on reaching legislators where you are a constituent (i.e. state legislators for your district)
• Be sure meet with your immediate supervisor/institutional Government Relations office, in order to ensure that you are representing your institution correctly.
• You can always advocate anytime as a private citizen (without representing your institution).

Don’t forget to join your fellow MASFAP members who will be speaking with Missouri legislators during MASFAP Hill Day on February 14!
Families who have planned ahead to pay for all years of college (38%), have more options available to them—while those without a plan are more likely to focus on affordability.

That’s one message of How America Pays for College 2014, the national survey conducted by Sallie Mae® and Ipsos. The report also confirmed that parents overwhelmingly believe that college is a worthwhile investment (98%), but at the same time, they are resourceful in containing costs.

Making choices to afford college
This annual study, now in its seventh year, shines a light on some of the choices that families are making to afford college. This year revealed the highest enrollment in two-year public colleges since the survey began (34%, up from 30% last year). In other cost-saving measures, students opted to attend in-state institutions (69%), cut back on entertainment (66%), live closer to home (61%), or live at home (54%). Approximately one-third reported encountering unanticipated expenses, like textbooks and travel costs.

Reaching into their pockets
This year’s study also showed that families reached into their own pockets to cover more than 40% of college costs. Borrowing decreased to cover only 22% of costs, the lowest level in five years.

Planners versus non-planners
Families with a plan to pay for all years of college were less likely than non-planners to restrict their choice of college based on cost. They also borrowed less to pay for school. On the other end of the planning spectrum, families who were the least prepared financially were the most likely to have considered not attending college due to cost.

The importance of guidance
These findings highlight the value of well-informed guidance and support that students and their families continue to need from schools. A well-thought-out plan can help families make the right financial decisions from the outset, reducing the probability that their student will need to change direction after enrolling.

For information and tools to help your students and their families build a plan to pay for college, visit www.SallieMae.com/PlanForCollege.

The full report of How America Pays for College 2014 and an infographic of the major findings are available at www.SallieMae.com/HowAmericaPays.
The choices students make about college create effects that extend well beyond their time in school. That’s not surprising, as we expect higher education to provide access to a lifetime of improved opportunities. But the challenges students face in fulfilling these aspirations don’t end with graduation. For many, they are just beginning. Loans enter repayment. Career searches begin.

And in the months and years before enrollment, students also confront many hurdles and complex decisions about college. These challenges span the classroom-to-career journey. Providing students resources every step of the way is foundational to the empowering ability of a student success program to realize a full return on the college investment.

These seven insight pillars for overcoming nonacademic barriers begin with college and career planning and continue through job hunting and student debt management:

- Choosing a pathway: Making good choices about careers and areas of study to pursue.
- Funding College: Applying for financial aid and managing loans while in school.
- Applying for College: Choosing a school and navigating the application process.
- Managing personal finances: Setting budgets, maximizing savings, and debt management.
- Boosting productivity: Goal setting, time and stress management, and organizational skills.
- Getting hired: Interview preparation, job hunting, and evaluating benefits and other compensation.
- Repaying education loans: Successfully repaying loans and overcoming repayment issues.

When implementing a student success program to educate students and former students on the nonacademic skills they need for success, make sure the content addresses these categories.

I hope that you had a wonderful holiday season and that your New Year, both annually and academically, will be a great one. And the Spring semester starts now. Have you ever wondered why we call the Spring Semester versus more logically the Winter-Spring Semester? It just makes more sense to me; of course, we do work in higher education, God Love It.

If you attended MASFAP's December Conference, you returned to your desk refreshed professionally energized with a renewed commitment to the mission of MASFAP and that of our Student Financial Services’ profession. I hope you attended some of the business officer sessions! If not, you missed some great presentations and they are available on the MASFAP website. We had inspiring presenters who shared their expertise, insights and suggestions. These presenters had exceptional value and utility for both business and financial aid officers. I encourage all financial aid officers to invite their business officers to become actively involved in MASFAP. Together we are the student financial service experts of our schools. To optimally deliver our inter-connected and dependent institutional student financial services, we need to work together in a dynamic partnership that enriches our students and our institutions.

The year of 2017 should be very interesting for us simply by the dynamics of a new President, Secretary of Education, Congress and Governor. However, in my 30+ years working in the trenches of financial aid and now student accounts, I have lived through and survived many Presidents, Ed. Secretaries, Congresses and Governors, not to mention some challenging students, parents and administrators. In hindsight, certain aspects of federal, state, and school scholarship-financial aid programs were deleted, added, and modified by these powers. However, over these years, the people, eternal politics, our mission and scholarship-financial aid programs are still with us and not too radically different.

We work in a profession that will always be political and dynamic, particularly since we deal with money. We live in capitalistic society where money determines power, which can dictate change, and often does. Regardless, those in power in DC, in Jefferson City, at our schools, and certainly our students and parents require us to accept change, provide constant service and always look for improvement. I know that we are up to this eternal challenge, especially since we deliver it each working day in our offices, via MASFAP and our profession.

Happy New Year and Spring Semester, GO FOR IT!
Henry Ford once said, “Coming together is a beginning. Keeping together is progress. Working together is success.” The common and key word in these three sentences is “together.” As the New Year swiftly gets underway after a nice winter break, it is refreshing and inspiring to see my office team back together and functioning like a clock with new batteries. Together they keep perfect time as they balance the needs of the constant flow of traffic that has anticipated our arrival back to campus and the demands of the campus itself. While each of them expressed the desire for a longer break in some form, it appeared that they were finding satisfaction in their work as they faced the day’s challenges as a team.

Collaborative and contributing work environments such as this makes it difficult as a Director of Financial Aid when forced to decide who should be selected to attend an off campus event such as the MASFAP Annual Conference. Mostly thanks to the Purdy funds for covering my team’s registration. Also thanks to some early planning and support of my administration, I was able to bring all of my team (minus the front line) to the fall conference. As I was deciding what to share in this edition of The Monitor, I asked my team for a quick response to two questions: take a moment and reply with your favorite or best take away or highlight from attending the conference….. In addition, I asked them to share a thought about attending as a team. Each and every response included something about togetherness. The variety of social/teambuilding activities were a hit! Togetherness. Each acknowledging the institutional office team as well as the larger team we are a part of in the State of Missouri, region, and nation. Togetherness. Each of my team mentioned the beneficial knowledge that was shared and gained. Each clearly appreciating newly made friends who are willing to support each other through this profession (in a way that only ones who are in it can understand). Togetherness. As one new FA advisor put it, the greatest benefit of the conference was “networking and a larger feeling of purpose.” Togetherness. So raise your glass (or bucket) and here’s to wishing you a successful year of coming together, keeping together and working together to accomplish our universal goal of helping students achieve their educational potential.

Dear MASFAP Annual Conference Participants,

The Lake of the Ozarks Idiots would like to thank you for partnering with us to adopt 10 families.

The program was a great success! On December 14, 2016 all 10 families including 25 children were ready for Christmas with 10 beautiful trees, presents for all the family members and plenty of food to help the family! To those of you that were able to help deliver the trees, we are sure you hold a special place in your heart for those families. In addition, the Idiots Club, was able to help 8 other families with 16 more children to complete their Christmas celebration with various items to each family.

We are grateful to have so many Partners that help us provide for the children in-need in the Lake of the Ozarks area. Please remember that any donation you made is tax deductible.

Thank you again for your amazing group of caring, loving and generous people that helped made our goal to make Christmas meaningful for children and their families.

Sincerely,

Denny & Danna Hiner

My New Year’s Resolution is to do something fun, unexpected or unplanned at least once a week and to spend more time with friends

_Dena Norris, Metropolitan Community College_

It is my intention in 2017 is to slow down, enjoy the ride and be present.

_Jamie Davis, Columbia College_

I hate to make them to break them!
